Despite promising results of randomized trials in the early nineties, chemotherapy has been less than successful in the treatment of advanced prostate cancer. There have been two randomized phase III trials evaluating the outcome of cyclophosphamide, methotrexate and 5-fluorouracil with or without prednisone as first-line chemotherapy in patients with advanced disease. Both studies, at first, showed superior survival rates in patients receiving chemotherapy but the difference at 3 years of follow-up did not reach statistical significance. Then, comparable results have been obtained in patients treated with one of the two regimens (CMF or M-CF) with the first one being much better tolerated with a clearly lower occurrence of grade 3-4 gastrointestinal toxicity. A further randomized trial in patients younger than 70 years has been conducted in order to detect differences in survival and toxicity between the first-line chemotherapy regimens. Patients were randomized in the two regimens with intraarterial (i.a.) infusion of BCNU. The results of this study are expected to be available in 2003. Both first-line chemotherapy and combined androgen blockade have been studied in the second-line setting after relapse or progression following a first line of chemotherapy. package org.nutz.mvc.intg.filter; import java.util.Map; import org.nutz.boot.starter.filter.FilterConfig; import org.nutz.ioc.loader.annotation.IocBean; @IocBean(name = "
