
Fifa 22 Activation

"With FIFA 22, we made a number of changes to core gameplay that I think you will notice. The most important thing we wanted to achieve was to introduce HyperMotion Technology to the game, and make us think about the on-ball and off-ball decisions, and how we can improve our decision-making ability as players in the game," said FIFA Lead Producer, Matt Prior. "Our goal is to use the data collected from our players to allow players to make better decisions in the game. "As a player, it's very realistic how we can make simple mistakes when playing in a game like this, for example: if a player is not using his body correctly, the player may make mistakes. If a player kicks the ball too late, the player may be able to catch the ball, and he may decide not to kick it all in one motion. What if a player sees someone's running away from them, and decides to put the ball between his feet and join the run, and he misses the goalkeeper? These are the types of things that if you play FIFA in real life, you might be able to make those type of mistakes," Prior continued. "As players, we are trying to be more proactive in the game. We are trying to make better decision-making on the game field. If we can collect data and ask players to play a soccer match, then we can help them make better decisions with that data." The on-ball and off-ball decisions made by players in a real-life football game are all simulated accurately by these new behaviours in FIFA 22. "We have players in motion capture suits running around a pitch, making tackles, taking free kicks," said Prior. "In real life, players are making decisions and reacting to what their opponents are doing. But when you're playing an official football match, it's more controlled. The data we collect from our players is more realistic. When you play a game like FIFA, we have a decision-making mechanic that helps us to simulate these decisions and reactions. The new way that players make decisions is using our data." One of the more fascinating new mechanics in FIFA 22 is "how the rules are applied." Real players don't always play by the rules, so when a player misses a clear chance at goal, it's important to decide whether that was a missed opportunity
