Since Photoshop offers such a powerful toolset for manipulating images, I strongly encourage you to try to use it for your projects. Don't limit yourself to the methods outlined in this book if you plan to create an image for publishing. When I'm asked to do a photo shoot, I often feel limited because I've never taken a

Photoshop class and only have about two to three hours of experience to work with. I design from the center out, which means my first step is to design and lay out my main image from the center out. I then go around the image and add the other elements one at a time until I have an image that's ready for print, advertising, e-mailing, or something online. Try not to limit yourself. Put in the time to learn the basics of Photoshop so that you don't fall back on the "stick with me because I'm an experienced designer" feeling when you really need to explore other creative options. In this book, I use a lot of Photoshop's various menu options, but sometimes it's a simple drag and drop that will suffice. If I have a more complex task that I need to perform, I'll give you a step-by-step description of the process so that you can succeed in the same manner.

## Choosing an Image

Choosing a good image to start with is important. With so many thousands of images being uploaded online, there is a wealth of wonderful images to choose from, so you may never have to choose one again. However, you do need to have a good reason for choosing a particular image. For example, an image of a man may be dramatic and would work well for a story about the hero of the titling, but it may not work well when the hero is sporting a frown and looking somewhat like he just woke up from being hit in the head. Be creative and think about what concept you want to translate in the image. Choose a photo that has an implied or explicit story behind it, and you'll make it much easier to tell that story effectively. If you want your images to be unique, one way to achieve that is to take a good photograph of something. I prefer to take my own photographs, but a photo of your child or family member that's in the same pose as one of your clients could make a quick and effective image, or you could find someone to take a good photograph for you. ## Making the Image Ready for Printing After you have

North Vs South Korea South and North Korea have been in conflict since 1945. South Korea is 9 times the size of North Korea, but in 1950 North Korea was a strategic and industrial powerhouse. The region that is known as Korea, was a key region in the Russian and American cold war. In 1945, North Korea was a very communist country, very similar to North Vietnam. South Korea was more of a Soviet influenced country. Korea was a crucial region because of its immense economic value. South Korea was a far more powerful economy, due to the fact that it was a capitalist and democratic country. The communist country and capitalist country were drastically different. The North Korean government was very, very, socialist. North Korea was communist, and living standards were extremely low. South Korea was more similar to North America, because South Korea was a capitalist and democratic nation. Therefore the North Korean government lived on the government's money. The South Korean government was very powerful because of the fact that they did not have to rely on their own economy for their power and sovereignty. Then in 1994, the two countries began to develop. In the year 1994, South Korea had been forced to use its own strategy. North Korea was using a Marxist policy. North Korea was not enjoying its sovereignty, and the people were not happy with their leaders. North Korea began to develop nuclear weapons, and was the first to test them. This is where we began to see the conflict. On June 26, 2016, the North Korean Regime launched an intercontinental ballistic missile. This missile has a range of 1,300 miles. It can easily hit any major city in the United States. North Korea has experienced a war like development. They believe that North Korea is a beautiful place. South Korea, however, does not want to live in a country where food and development are high, when the government is not run properly. South Korea has a very developed economy. South Korea must have a strong defense, because of the fact that the United States has large economic power. South Korea has a military where they have large armies, but North Korea has large amount of scientists and nuclear scientists. We are seeing how the military is carrying out war games in South Korea. It is very dangerous. If the people in the South continue to push the communist leaders, there will be a war, and the people will be killed. It is highly important that the

United States comes in and helps out in fighting against North Korea. In the course of the Cold War,
